“ When my sister Brenda was 8 years old and I was 4 years she taught me A lesson that served me well through life. I called her Joycie as we grew up and I would go to Joycie 3 or 4 times a day to have her tie my shoe strings. She finally decided to teach me to tie my own shoe strings. We sat down on the concrete porch of our Grandmother's house where we lived at the time. We tied and untied my shoes forever it seemed at the time but I did learn to tie my shoe strings. The lesson she taught me that day was not about tying shoes. The lesson I was taught was how to be independent. As we grew up together Joycie would very often intervene on my behalf to get me out of scrapes or mischief. When she became a teenager she told me in no uncertain terms that her name was Brenda and I was to quit calling her Joycie. My sister Brenda may be gone, but Joycie is in my heart forever.
